At the request of Art Lundahl, [redacted] (Training Officer for NPIC) called to let OTR know about NPIC's recent negotiations and correspondence with the Department of Defense Computer Institute (DODCI)./ Some NPIC personnel have attended past runnings of the DODCI Senior Executive Course and because of its high quality, the demand for future participation has increased./ However, because of the limited number of spaces available and a desire for a course more responsive to the specific needs of NPIC, it was decided to meet with DODCI to seek a solution to the problem. This meeting with members of the DODCI staff produced an agreement that it would be a good idea if DODCI were to design a special one-week ADP course for NPIC personnel only. Art Lundahl then wrote to the Secretary of the Navy on 16 November with a proposed statement of course objectives. In this letter he suggested that the training be conducted in [redacted] and requested that the first running be held in early spring 1966. (So far there has been no response to this letter.)

25X1 5. This has been a busy week for our Training Assistant. In her capacity as the IBM contact she prepared and processed 63 enrollment applications. This included coordination [redacted]

25X1 It was also a busy one for the Travel Assistant. Over the weekend there were 15 departures for Defense schools:

25X1 6. [redacted] OCR, will attend the Senior Executive Course, Department of Defense Computer Institute, beginning 13 December.

7. The Registrar at the Joint Military Packaging Training Center, Aberdeen Proving Ground was "thrilled" to hear that the Central Intelligence Agency wished to use their courses. It was the first query they have ever had from the Agency. We requested two spaces in their "Basic Packing." It is a two week course for GS-4's and above.

There appears to be a change in the training policy of the Office of Logistics. They are branching out from the old standard-set-traditional-courses as well as sponsoring a wider range of employees. In part, this may be due to the new Defense Logistics Management Training Board, which has published a consolidated logistics management training catalog. The catalog states that "the total requirement for logistics and procurement management training exceed DoD capacity, and it is imperative that maximum utilization be made of existing facilities." [redacted] is not letting this new opportunity pass him by. There appears to be an increasing emphasis to relating training programs to career advancement.
